DEATH Strikes Four

by LaRoc Semroff

Big Slug O'Donnell had a hunch something was wrong, but someone ate cop play some mighty queer tricks

"GET GOIN' Slug. Soup on it," snapped Zig Sparrow, as he sprang into the big sedan, tossing a black oxford into the back seat. Slug O'Donnell, the [illegible] just the opposite of the [illegible] with the [illegible] block hair slicked down as smooth as honey. Slug was a great big, lumbering, [illegible] whose brown hair was [illegible] rumpled and unkempt, and whose deep blue eyes [illegible] rebellious resistance and trembling [illegible] music. Even now, he took his time about getting [illegible] rug. One of the side of his [illegible] he noticed the swirl [illegible] over the snow from which Zig had just run out. Mingled [illegible] the noise of the acceleration of their car were a number of blurred sounds. A faint cry for help—running footsteps, commands [illegible] the noises of the low-powered three and the far off whine of a [illegible] car motor. But they soon left all that behind. They were rolling along a country highway.

"Did you have to crack the old guy?" asked Slug. They were several miles from the city.

"Yeah, I guess so," answered Zig in his usually jerky manner. "There was an old dame there too—named Yamamura' [illegible] asked around a 'yamamura' dame. So I gave her the works."

"Funny [illegible] a [illegible] Zig gave [illegible] dirty look.

"Never lay off them Mexican cigarettes."

[illegible] very [illegible] of [illegible] speaks [illegible] So [illegible] Slug. "Cars [illegible] [illegible] [illegible]
